Wincolmlee

Wincolmlee is really four streets Trippett, Wincolmlee, Wapping and Church St. Trippett is the part of Sculcoates from the Charterhouse southwards to the town's walls. It became part of Hull Corporation's land in 1611 although the corporation had leased it from the priors of the Charterhouse since 1519. The deed (1517-18), bearing the signature of Cardinal Wolsey, awarded the land to the Corporation on an annual rent of £4, the Corporation relinquished all claims to any jurisdiction in Sculcoates. At the dissolution of the lesser monasteries the rent became payable to the Crown and it was only redeemed in 1863. Trippett finally became part of the borough of Hull, along with the rest of Sculcoates, in the boundary changes of 1837. From 1442 Hull had six wards, including Trippett, which the Corporation then claimed extended to the gates of the Charterhouse. This ward was renamed North Ward by 1481. Trippett, outside the walls, existed by 1347 when it contained three tenements and plots and in 1377 there were sixteen households with an adult population of 30. Trippett "is and alwey hath bene an holy place of Sanctuary," according to the Prior of the Charterhouse in 1517, as a consequence its boundaries were marked with stone crosses. The base of one of these crosses, the 'Stone Chair', remained at the corner of Charterhouse Lane Staith until around the beginning of this century.

Wincolmlee appears to have been everything built-up north of the Charterhouse until the appearance of Wapping. The origin of the name Wapping is a slight mystery, although there is a Waplington in the East Riding that Nicholson thinks was the ton, or town, of the clan Wapling. Smith lists some alternatives, from the Old English personal name Wappa, or the Old English wapelian 'to bubble, emit, pour forth', or the Old Fresian wapel 'pool, marsh, swamp'. Smith also suggests that Waplington could come from the Danish place name Vobbel, from Old Fresian wapul, hence 'marsh farm'. This suggests that Wapping describes the nature of the land rather than a settlement, i.e. a stream running through marshland. Wapping is in the 1791 Hull directory with one inhabitant, William Askam, pot maker. Bower's plan of Hull in 1791 shows Trippett and Wincolmlee built up as far as the present Cumberland Street with the North Brewhouse opposite but does not mention Wapping. Sheahan, writing in 1864, stated the Wapping was between the two ferries that crossed the River Hull, i.e. High Flags to the Ferry Boat Tavern nearly opposite York Street. The northern ferry served the cotton mills while the southern ferry was known as the 'Brewhouse Wrack' as it ran between the breweries on either side of the river. Wapping is on Craggs 1817 plan of Hull but not in the 1817, or 1814, Hull directory, where Church Street is listed north of Barmston Drain. Church Street made its first appearance in Hull directories in 1806 but Turner's 1805 Guide to Hull contains an interesting list of streets. "Trippet, from Bridge Street to Charterhouse Lane; Wincolmlee, from Trippet to Wapping Drain; Wapping, south end of Church Street; Church Street, from Wincolmlee to Sculcoates Church; Wilson's Row, south side Wapping Drain." Wilson's Row was on the south side of Cottingham Drain and in 1826 Wapping started from 5 Church Street.

G H Hill in 1909 pointed out that this section of Cottingham Drain was the southeast arm of Old Derringham Dike. "The other arm of Old Derringham Dike ran south east from the corner of Newland Tofts Lane (Cemetery Gates and Railway) and the angle of Sculcoates Pastures, down the north side of Spring Bank, to Beverley Road Corner. Thence by Marlbro' Terrace (which is its old bed) to Sculcoates Gote [Goate or Gout is an artificial watercourse, a drain or sewer], at High Flags, the southern boundary of Sculcoates Township. From whence to Charterhouse Lane was Wincolmlee and beyond that to the Towns Gate, was The Liberty of Trippet." The arrangement of Trippett to the Charterhouse, Wincolmlee to Cottingham Drain with Church Street extending northwards continued until c. 1891 when Church Street and Trippett were incorporated into Wincolmlee.

Goddard and Lancaster published a plan of Hull based on, but different to, one of the fourteenth century in Frost's Early Notices of Hull. The following is quoted from Sheppard's Evolution of Hull; "the main difference, however, being that whereas Frost shows the connection of the old River Hull with the present river at Sculcote Gote, near the Charterhouse, at a very awkward angle; Goddard and Lancaster's plan shows the connection in a much more natural way, at the bend of the river, a little to the north. The triangular piece of land formerly within the junction of the two streams is known as Wincolmlee, a name still preserved in the street, and, as Boyle pointed out, the name itself is an indication that the present plan is more correct. The compound parts are 'Wincel,' a corner, angular piece of land, 'holme,' an island; and 'leah,' a field or meadow. Wincolmlee or Wincholmlea is therefore 'a field in the corner of an island,' a name which is perfectly descriptive." However, Goddard and Lancaster's plan does not label Wincolmlee, Sheppard presumably is quoting Boyle. Richardson in his Streets of Hull, 1849, gave a similar derivation.

Bay Horse

In 1802 the devisees of Christopher Scott sold several houses on the corner of Wincolmlee and the newly laid out Machell St. to Robert Beharrell, yeoman. The property was in occupation of Robert Beharrell the younger, Matthew Gedling, John Newmarch and Robert Beharrell senior and measured 105 ft on the south side, 101 ft on the north, breadth at east side next to Wincolmlee was 26 ft and at the west side 54 ft. Although the Bay Horse is not mentioned by name it is obviously part of the property. Later in 1802 Robert Beharrell senior, tanner, sold to William Stretton a messuage with out offices now used as a public house known as the Bay Horse in occupation of Robert Beharrell junior, together with the adjoining messuage in Machell St.

Hadley in his 'History of Hull' gives an anecdotal derivation of Wincolmlee as coming from a landlady of an alehouse who winked. Richardson in his 'Streets of Hull' thought this ale house was the Bay Horse and gives a brief description of the place; "the house appears at the present time, 1849, to be a very old one, placed below the present level of the street as you have to descend step to get into it."

By 1806 Richardson, Terrington & Co. owned the Bay Horse.

Sale of Sellers estate in 1816 included the Bay Horse.

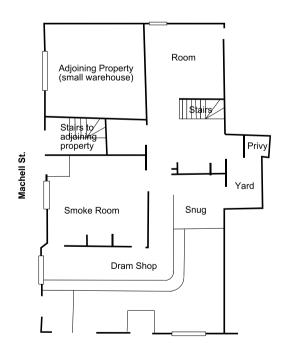

Rebuilt by Peter Robson in 1878.

Suffered minor damage in 1943.

The warehouse adjoining to the north and rear was purchased in 1947.

New living accommodation was provided in 1949 on the first floor at a cost of £700.

The wall between the bar and smoke room was demolished in 1960.

De la Pole Tavern

The earliest available deeds for the site date from 1756 when Daniel Briggs sold a messuage, tenement, dwelling house shop and premises on the corner of Charterhouse Lane and Wincolmlee to William Burton. There were two buildings, one on the corner and one adjoining to the north both in occupation of John and Ann Lockwood whose son, Joseph, established the brewery at High Flags, Wincolmlee. John Lockwood, a yeoman, died in 1763 and in 1767 the Burton family sold the property to another yeoman, John Boxstead, the two houses were then occupied by Ann Lockwood and Nathaniel Ellison. Ann died in 1788 and her personal estate was valued at, household goods £10 with cash and notes £240 10s. John Boxstead had died in 1773 and left the property to his wife, Rebekah, in trust for his son, John, who was a minor. An interesting clause in the will stated that if his son died before the age of twenty-one then his house was to be given to the town of Retford in Nottinghamshire for the use of the poor. Happily for us John reached maturity and before 1803 opened his house as a pub. Boxstead and his wife, Ann, sold the property in 1835 to William Dickinson, who had established the Pryme's Wharf

Brewery in Wincolmlee opposite New George St., and John Walker. A year late Dickinson and Walker bought the adjoining tenements in Charterhouse Lane, from Mr Beet, and in 1837 bought the premises to the west of the tenements and converted them into a maltkiln.

North

· · · · · Boundary of new Buildings

Between 1837 and 1839 Dickinson and Walker pulled down all the old buildings when Wincolmlee was widened by ten feet where Boxstead's old buildings had been. The street widening only affected Boxstead's former property, the section to the north was still very narrow, but by the early 1880s the whole of Wincolmlee had been widened. Dickinson built a new 2½ storey building on the corner to replace the old pub and named it the De la Pole Tavern with six chambers (i.e. bedrooms), two parlours, dramshop, tap room, excellent cellar, etc. Boxstead, who died 25 December 1846, had called his house the Board or the Jug. Walker sold his share in the property to Dickinson in 1842. In 1844 Dickinson retired as a brewer and William Grayburn took over. Grayburn bought the De la Pole Tavern, four tenements and the maltkiln from Dickinson in 1846. William Dickinson died in the Charterhouse Hospital in 1860 aged sixty-six.

Grayburn did not stay long at the Pryme's Wharf Brewery and was succeeded by the wine merchant John Brodrick by 1856. Grayburn had agreed to sell the De la Pole, etc. to Brodrick in 1851 but the deal was not completed until 1856. Brodrick mortgaged the property to John Lambert in 1857 who then mortgaged it to Pease the banker. Brodrick, and his undertenants, continued to occupy the pub and maltkiln but in 1868 Pease sold the property to the Charterhouse. John Brodrick died in 1869 aged 64 but his son, John Henry Brodrick, took over the business and rented the De la Pole Tavern, four tenements and the maltkiln from the Charterhouse. Brodrick took the wine merchant John Henry Peters into partnership in 1882 but the partnership was dissolved in 1895. However, Brodrick continued to run the brewery until his death in 1912 when it probably closed. Peters continued to rent the De la Pole and maltkiln from 1896 and ran the wine and spirits business in the name of Brodrick and Peters. The Hull Brewery Co. Ltd. took over the Peter's business in 1924/5 although it continued to operate until 1933 and in that year the De la Pole Tavern closed.

Dog and Duck

Although built before 1808 by James Lowther, yeoman, (James Lowther of the Ship, 1803?) the house at 86 Church Street, Sculcoates, did not have a license before c. 1834. Lowther sold the messuage and land, containing 148 sq. yd., in 1808 to Robert Watson, spirit merchant. Two years later William Stephenson was the owner but he died in 1824. Stephenson's executors and trustees, principally James Lascelles, an oil refiner who moved to Leeds and William Hattersley, a millwright who moved to Knaresborough, conveyed the property to John Hayton, labourer, who owned property to the south, in 1835. A porter merchant, Henry Smith, then acquired the property. The public house changed hands again in 1853 when George Wheatley, Esq. bought it, however, Wheatley died the following year. Wheatley's trustees sold the Dog and Duck to William Bromby, common brewer, in 1866. Bromby died in 1880 and his sister, Charlotte Bromby inherited the estate. At his death Bromby owned the following public houses:

Albert Dock Tavern, 132 English St.
Abercrombie beer house, 41 Campbell St.
Sir John Falstaff Inn, 16 Humber St.
Jolly Sailor beer house, Grimsby Lane
Carlton Hotel, Waterworks St.
Ship and Plough Inn, Salthouse Lane
Dog and Duck Tavern, 86 Church St.
Humber Tavern, Paull
Salutation beer house, Cannon St.
Ship Inn, 5 Prospect Place, Drypool

Charlotte died in 1888 and her trustees sold the Dog and Duck to Moors' and Robson's Breweries Ltd. a year later. When the Dog and Duck closed in 1933 its license was transferred to The Avenue, Chantlands Avenue.

The Duke William has a similar address to the Duke of Cumberland and as William Augustus was the Duke of Cumberland it is likely they are the same premises. Mary Bell was victualler of the Duke William in 1804. 1791 Thomas Bell (victualler & carpenter)

Sculcoates Brewery

By 1805 the Sculcoates Brewery Tap House was owned by Richardson, Terrington & Rodmell, brewers. The company's brewery was on the riverside of Wincolmlee, the site now opposite Cumberland St. Although the brewery closed in 1810, and the utensils sold, a deed of 1814 contains a description of the property. Richardson, Terrington & Rodmell, merchants, surrendered the mortgage to John Dopkin, merchant, - two acres of ground called Pinfold Close purchased by John Richardson from Matthew Henry Witham with brewery, malthouses, etc. There was a common passage dividing the property from a public house to the south. The pub must have fronted the river and probably opened when the brewery was built, sometime prior to 1781.

Sculcoates Commercial Hotel

Hunts

HA 20/8/1803 sale of land belonging to George Pryme fronting on George St., now making. [To be called George St. – several lots with staith communicating with river, Intended to be extended through Pryme St. to Prospect St. connecting the eastern and western extremities of Hull with the parish of Sculcoates. Plan could be seen at John Fox's, builder, Sculcoates.] Pryme later laid out Caroline, Raywell, Reform and Russell Streets.

In June 1937 a newly built smoke room, hotel yard and outbuildings, part of a wharf and part of a warehouse yard collapsed into the River Hull. Only shortly before a ship on the river pulled the hotel outbuilding down with its rope. It had just been rebuilt when it collapsed. The cause was put down to water working in underneath the riverside walls, which were very old; there were also old cellars underneath the yards.

Sculcoates Tavern

The Sculcoates Tavern was on the corner of Wincolmlee and Scott Street. In March 1802 William Cant, victualler, (in 1791 Cant was a victualler at Dock Side) bought the site, 81' 6" along "the high road in Wincolmlee", 61' along Scott Street, 83' 6" on the west and 65' on the south, from Christopher Scott's devisees, Christopher Machell, John Alderson, John Carr and Benjamin Blades. Scott Street had recently been made and Cant built six houses on the corner site including a public house known by the sign of the Whale's Shoulder. When Clayton's 1803 directory was published Cant had renamed his pub the Sculcoates Tavern. By November 1803 Cant had moved from Sculcoates to Hull when he sold his property to William Stretton of Derby and Stretton's trustee, Rev John Foster; Thomas Cooper occupied the Sculcoates Tavern. Stretton sold the Sculcoates

Tavern to John Rivis, of the brewery at High Flags, Wincolmlee, later in 1803. The plot occupied 34 ft east to west and 32 ft north to south.

The Sculcoates Tavern may have been bought by Gleadow & Dibb, later renamed the Hull Brewery, as they extended the dram shop in 1874. Hull Brewery must have sold it by 1890 as the Lorne Hotel, as the Sculcoates Tavern was renamed in 1876, does not appear in a list of their property drawn up in that year. In the early to mid 1870s the pub was known as the Vulcan Inn after the almost adjacent Vulcan Iron Works.

The Lorne Hotel closed in 1898 when Ind Coope & Co. Ltd. sold it to J P Kirk. The pub seems to have remained closed until 1911 when it reopened as the Lorne Working Men's Club then the Victory Club. Kirk owned the brewery in Sherburn that passed to the Scarborough and Whitby Breweries Ltd. in 1923. Scarborough Breweries sold the Victory Club in 1925 and in 1954 it became the property of the Hull Malt Co. Ltd.

In 1848 Robinson became a spirit merchant and victualler of the Crooked Billet, Trippet; and founded the Victoria Brewery, Green Lane by 1851. In 1863 he took William Smith into partnership, the partnership lasted until 1873 when Smith was the sole occupant of the brewery. James was born in 1792 in Hull, his wife, Mary, was born in Sculcoates in 1801. He was a publican in 1821, they were both wine and spirit merchants in 1851.
